This year has been ... a Tapestry

A poem without a word ...
I have seen this image weaving itself,
Sometimes brightly, sometimes darkly,
Yet always distinctly mine.
This year has been a tapestry,
Woven of itself, colored of itself.
Without a word, it speaks to me.
Without a touch, I feel it.

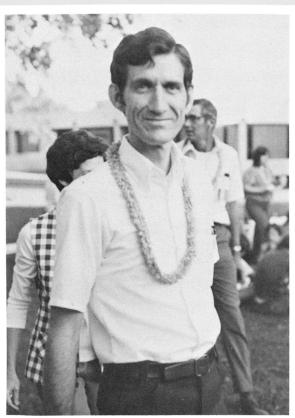

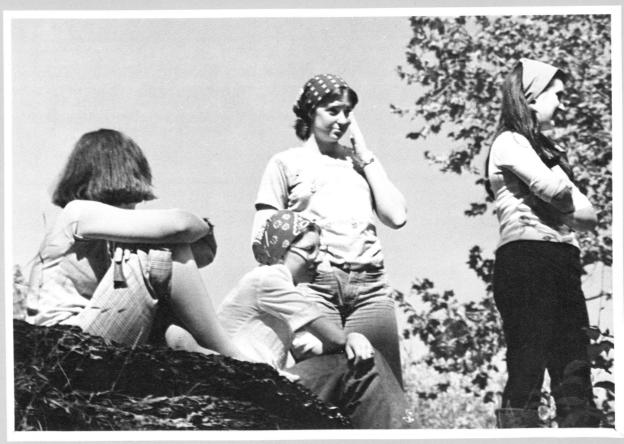

I have immersed myself in life, and found it good. Whether the thread runs pure as gold, Or darkly, matters not to me.
In my own time I watched life play, And confirmed that my being in this world Was being a part of the richness, The deep richness of the tapestry.

Yes, I have seen the familiar woven in,
Each memory of soft hue like a thread,
Developing, enveloping itself, each thread
Becoming a fragment of the vast picture,
Becoming an image of thought and of emotion.
This is the way joy is conceived:
In richness, in splendor, and in the familiar.

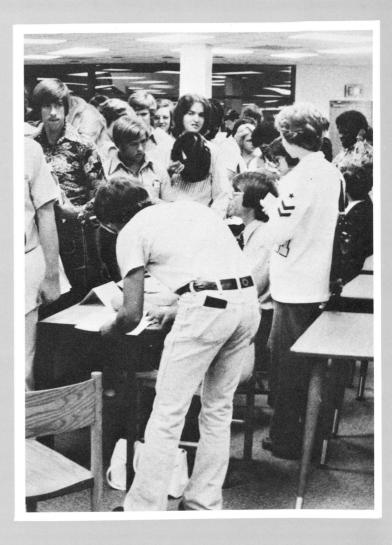

I have seen the hues of brilliant threads
Working themselves into the time sublime.
My pursuit in this world is as a thread,
A part of some vast encompassing design,
Bright and dark, woven of itself.
My being is part of the tapestry,
A small fragment of the brilliant hues,
A portion of the familiar existence,
A thread caught up in the grand conception.

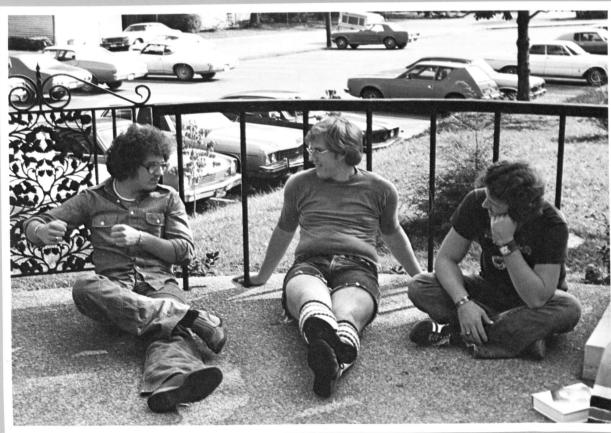

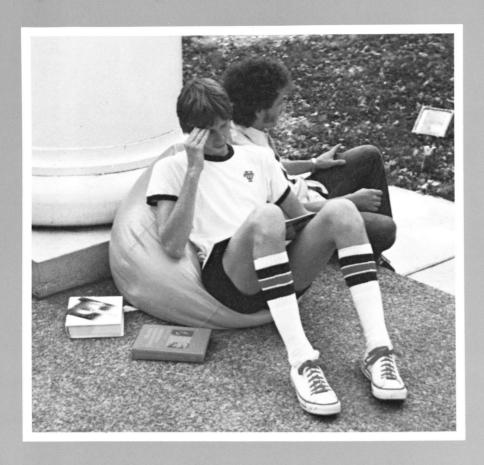

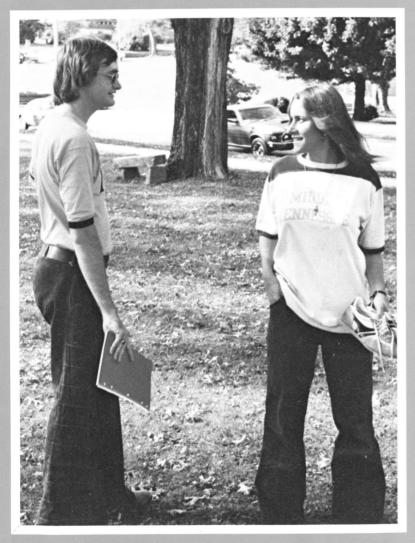

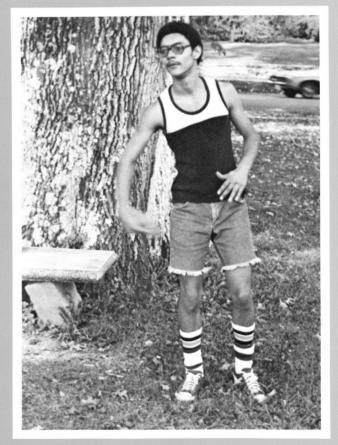

My heart is weaving on a golden frame;
My mind is coloring, contributing to pictures,
And sunrise to sunset blending richness.
In my own time I have spent emotion;
In my fervor to touch the true sublime.
But I am only words and not a picture.
My heart has woven, and my mind has colored,
Converging in the tapestry. No words

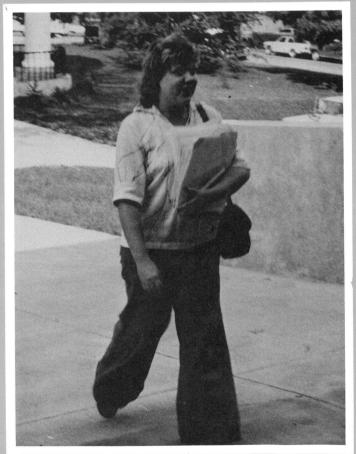

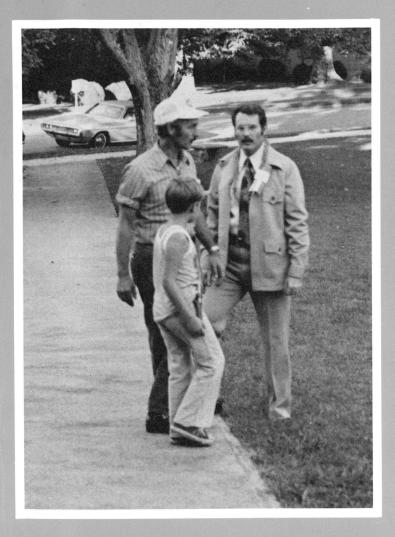

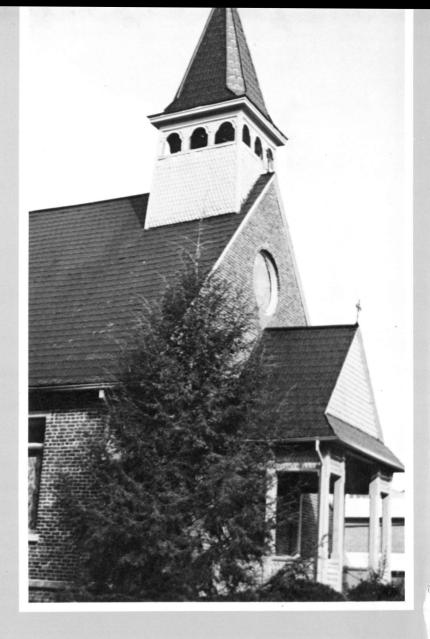

This year has been a tapestry;
In a transport of feeling I have touched it,
But not held it, for it is not complete.
In my own time I see it still weaving,
Richly, coloring itself, a quiet poem.
This is my remembrance of the world:
The rich, the brilliant, the familiar.
This is the tapestry.

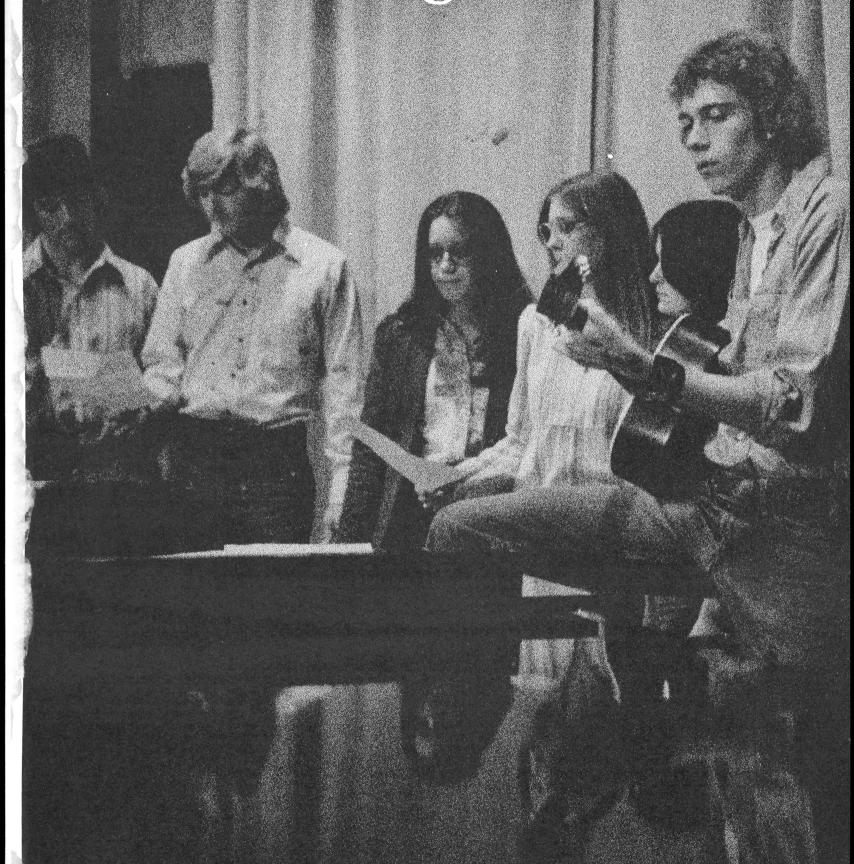

It might have been the writer's true design, When writing "Tapestry" to leave a blank And hollow feeling in the listener's mind That he might stop to ponder, and to thank. Be thankful, she was saying, for the hues Of unsurpassed blue, the bits of gold, The richness unapproachable, which imbues Each memory we cannot write or hold. Thus, now I sing this song with overtones Of color and of joy, like weaving dreams In words and casting out bright rainbow stones Upon the waters of the soul's deep streams. I kneel; I know the richness given me By life itself . . . I know the tapestry.

This is the way our tapestry continues.

This is the way our year develops itself.

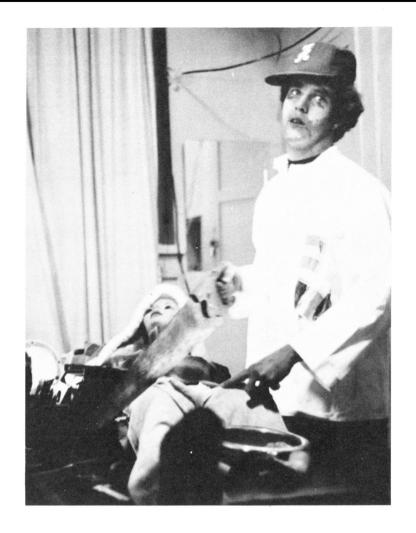

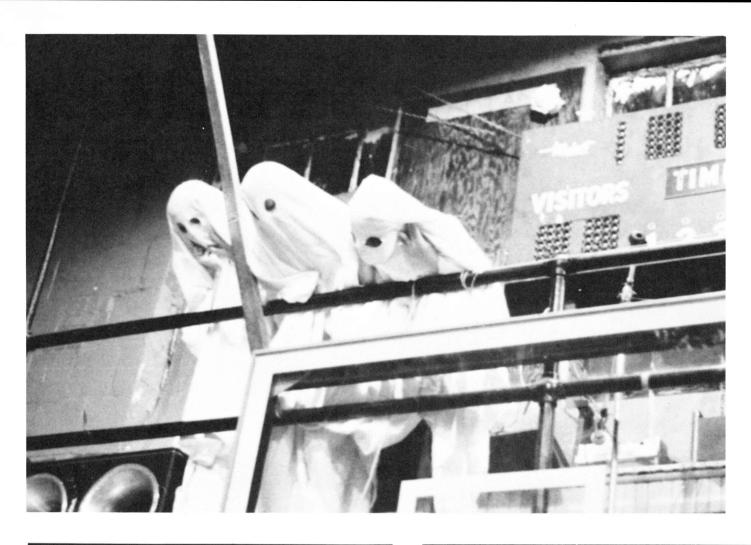

Boo Out!

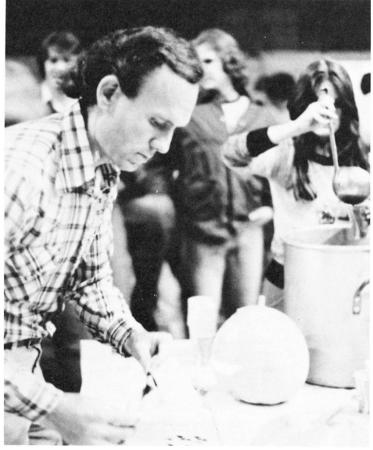

"I vant to suck your blood!" snarls the vampire to the pretty young thing as he proceeds to chase her around the room. "No! No!," she screams, but, alas, after chasing her out of the room, he catches her and triumphantly bears her limp body in amid gasps and groans of horror. Not something that takes place all the time, huh? Let's hope not! This was one of the incidents which took place at the Halloween Boo-Out given by Martin for the children of Pulaski who normally wouldn't have experiences like this. Everyone participated in some way to make it one of the most fun and scary times of their lives. There were booths sponsored by different clubs and organizations to give the kids a chance to show their skill, various monsters roaming around, a fortune-teller, a spook-house full of frightening scenes, and all sorts of eerie sounds to set the mood. Refreshments were served by witches and gypsies. Everything worked together to make it a night the children won't easily forget!

Issues

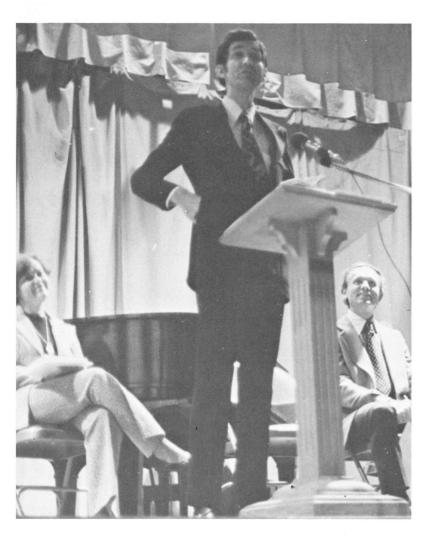

Michael Perry, Gwen Daly, Larry Anderson, and Terrie Evans presented an assembly program in which current issues pertaining to the Presidential election were discussed.

"Andante"

Jeanice Moore and Zoe Harris presented an evening of piano music as the first event in the Fine Arts Concert Series.

Christmas Assembly

Dr. Wayne Masters delivered the Christmas message during the Christmas program. The choir performed a chorus from the Christmas Oratorio by Saint-Saëns.

Christmas Party

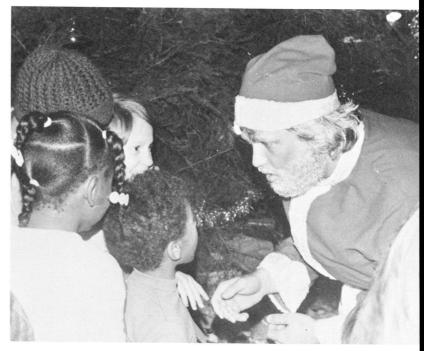

The Student Christian Association sponsored the Christmas Party for underprivileged children December 12. Martin students adopted a child for the night, buying Christmas presents for Santa Claus to give to the children. A night of games, gifts, and refreshments was enjoyed by everyone.

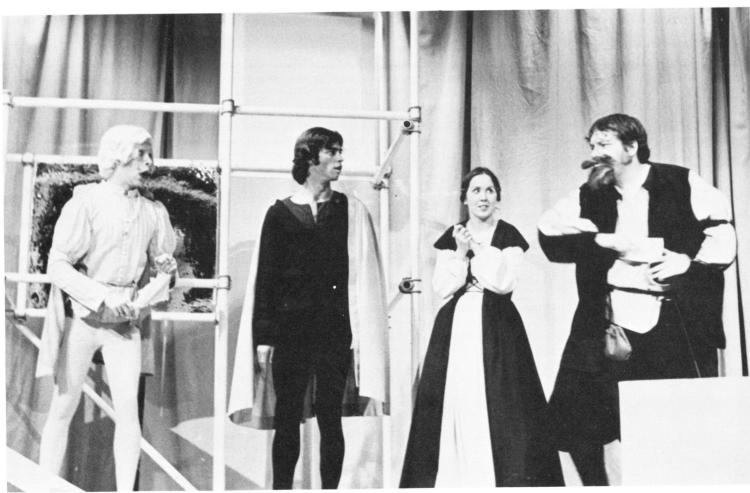

Twelfth Night

During the Christmas season the Berry Players from Berry College presented Shakespeare's Twelfth Night for the Martin family. An evening of comedy, romance, and crackling dialogue was enjoyed by all attending.

"With a heigh-ho, the wind and the rain."

Open Dorms

During the Christmas season the dorm students were given a chance to see how the other half lives. For two hours the dorms were open to all, and the male residents were able to view the hallowed corridors of Criswell Hall, and afterwards the Martin Ladies were given the opportunity to ramble through Upperman.

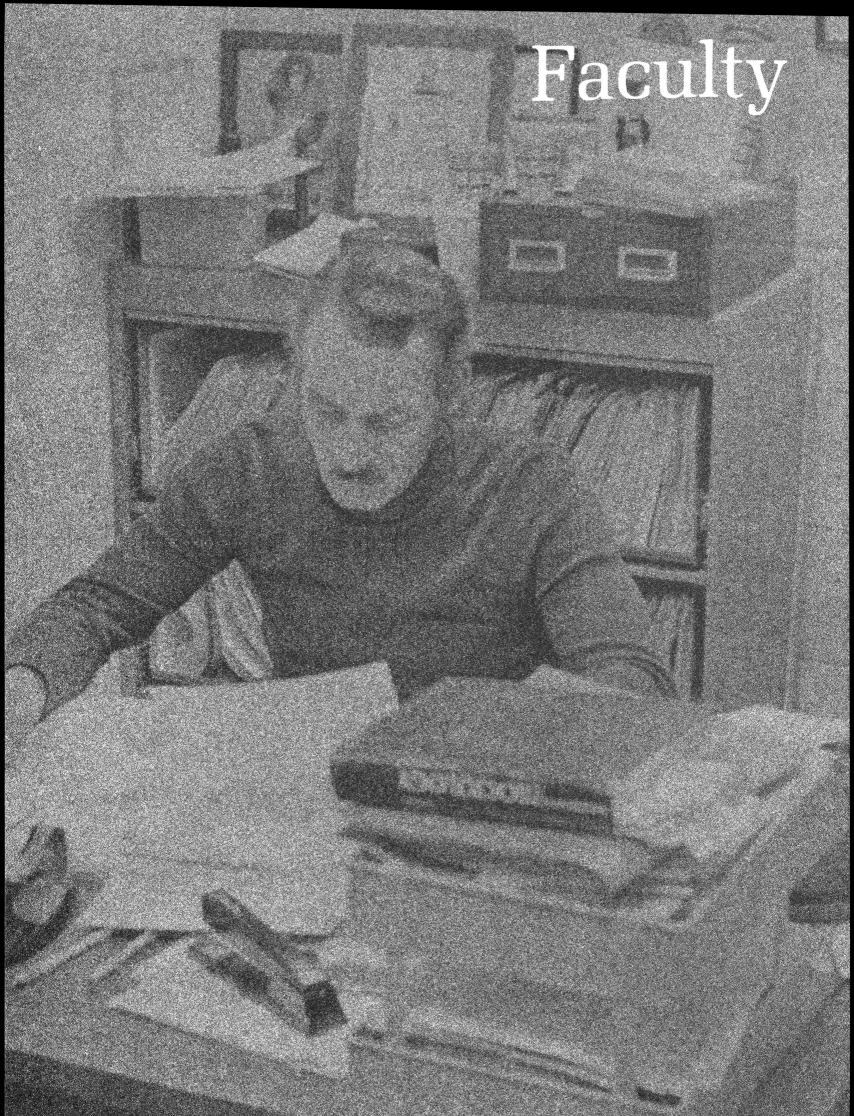

Alpha-Omegas present A Man for All Seasons

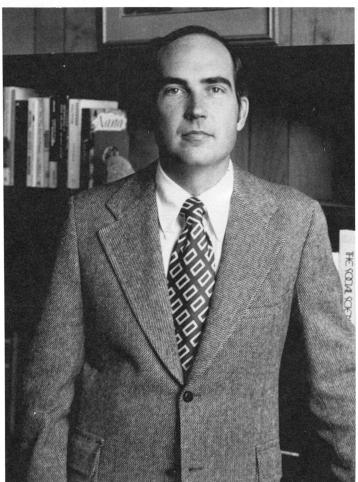

The Alpha-Omega Players of Dallas presented for the College Robert Bolt's classic drama about the last days and death of Sir Thomas More.

I made a contract with my fellow man To assist me producing this tapestry. Whether in cooperation or in conflict, I have learned to accommodate myself To the existence of others and their ideas. Together we create my familiar existence.

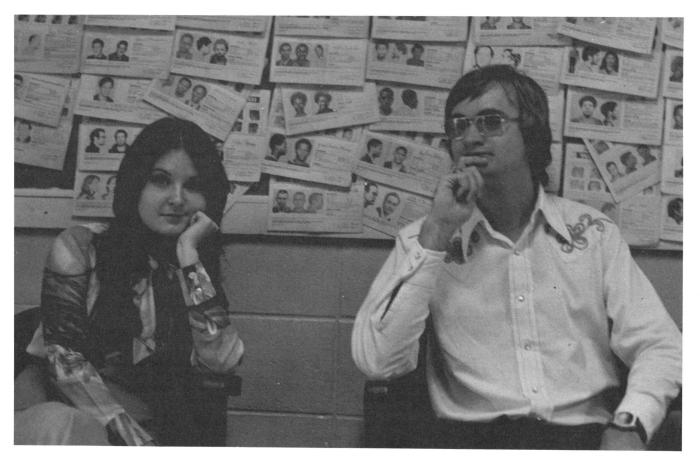

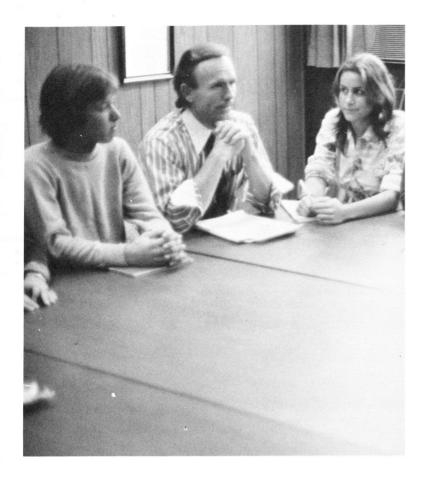

I have played and found in society A thread of life and force; Now, as this tapestry completes itself, I pause for the cherished moment When I view the tapestry as itself And myself as myself.

The essence of existence is to move,
To grow, to bud out of my own being.
In this tapestry I have seen life grow,
From the insignificant tiny bud
To a blossomed picture of what life is.
I am responsible in this development
For what I am, and for my part of the tapestry.

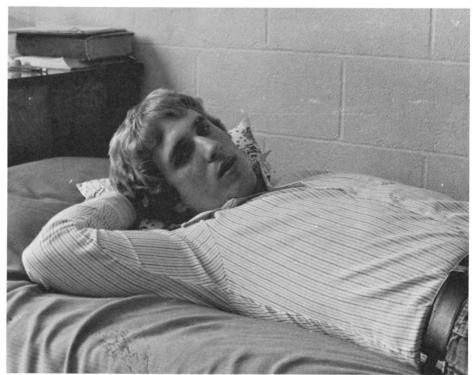

The picture of this existence
Is any moment caught in time,
Held up for examination to the light.
Nowhere in this universe is any moment richer,
More meaningful to me than this one thread.
This simple thread my eye is focused on,
This portion of the tapestry.

Every sight and every sound has added itself
To all the varied beauty woven in.
Whether Bach or "Bohemian Rhapsody",
Or Shakespeare or "Peace on Mars"
I have used my senses in perceiving
All the fancied images which life pours down.

I am not alive unless I perceive,
I am not a being until I move.
I am not myself without others.
I am not victorious unless I am broken.
This world is not mine alone,
It is a tapestry, perceived by all.

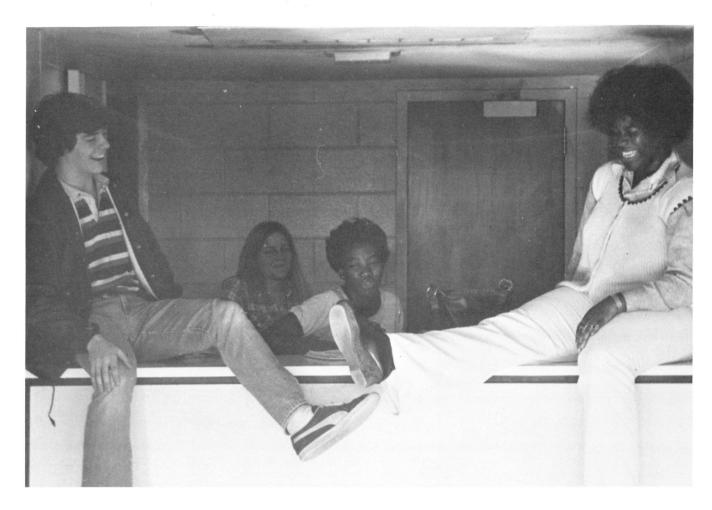

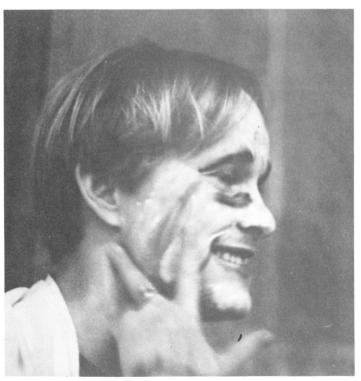

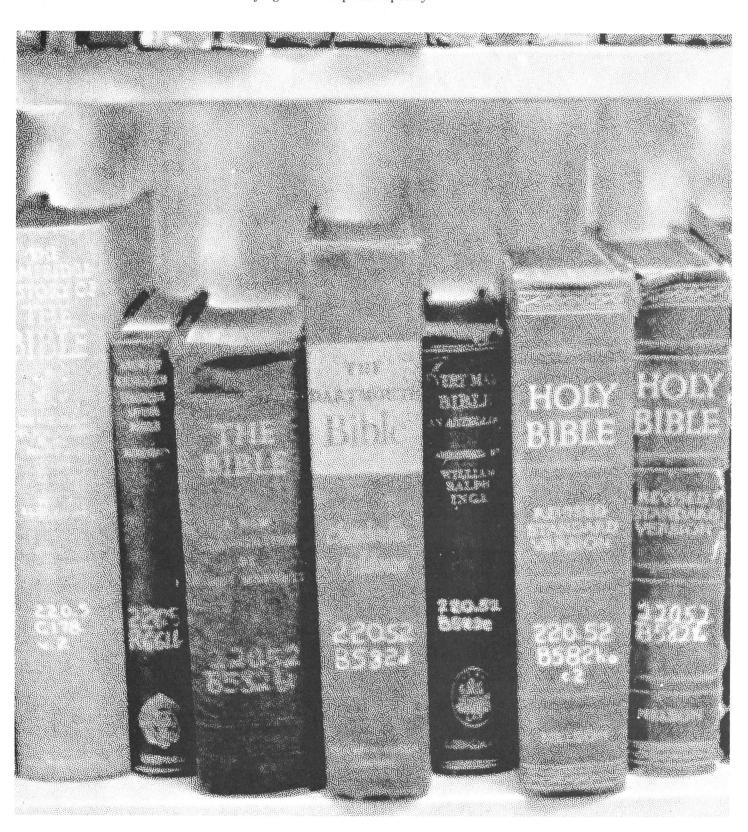

I am a mirror in a way.
I reflect this existence as the morn
Is reflected on the surface of the clear lake.
I am not stamped by this world.
Like a printed book, but am myself,
Yet still a true reflection of the world.

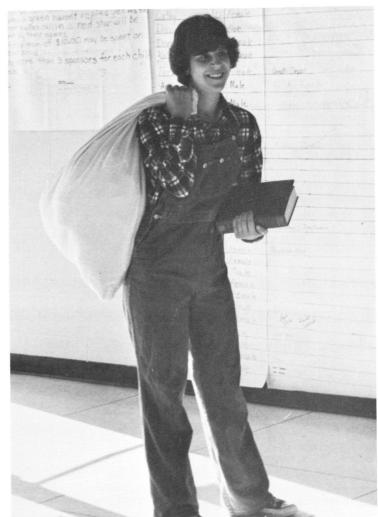

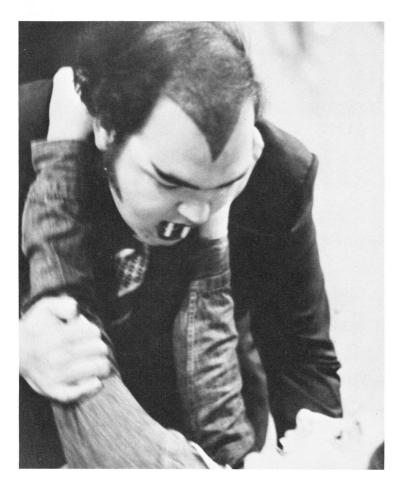

Every day is a new microcosm
And a part of the old order.
It's like my existence to look back on itself.
I may ponder the same foolish mistakes
And even repeat them over and over,
But I'm learning and growing ...
Trying to develop the tapestry.

We like to set our spirits on an edge
And dare them to topple over the brink.
Every step, every movement, involves a question;
Every act involves a calculated risk.
But I must move and act
In order to be and in order
To develop the tapestry.

My mind is prepared like a steel trap
To clutch each single image, one by one,
And then to compose a greater image,
A more commanding picture of the universe.
All's one in itself, and all becomes a part
Of the all-encompassing tapestry.

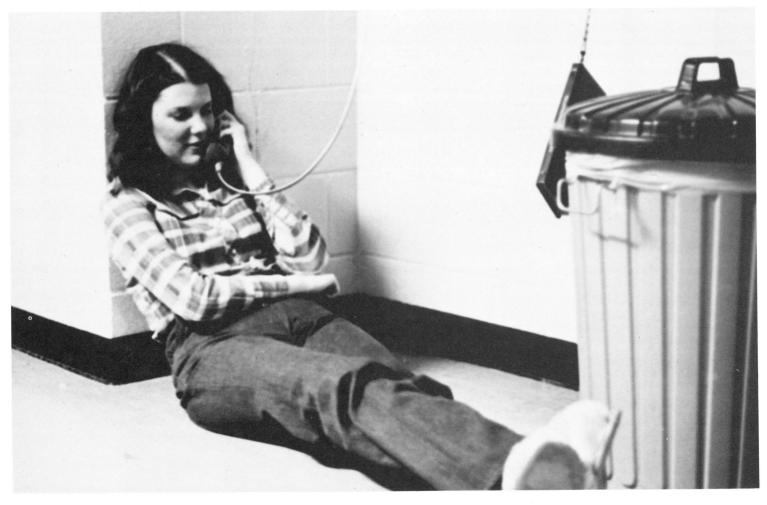

I never wish for long to escape from reality.

My mind faces reality as an obligation to itself.

Reality is my mainstay and my bond with life is truth—

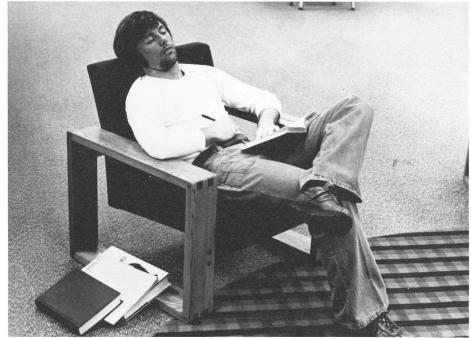

The truth that sets a man free and shows his soul

That regardless of the blackness or whiteness of the moment

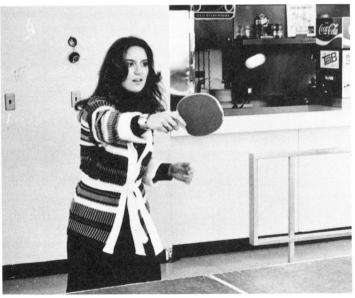

That there is a tapestry richness, a pure intense meaning

To this existence, this tapestry.

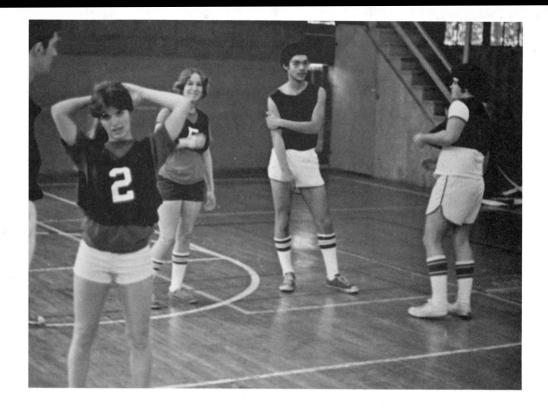

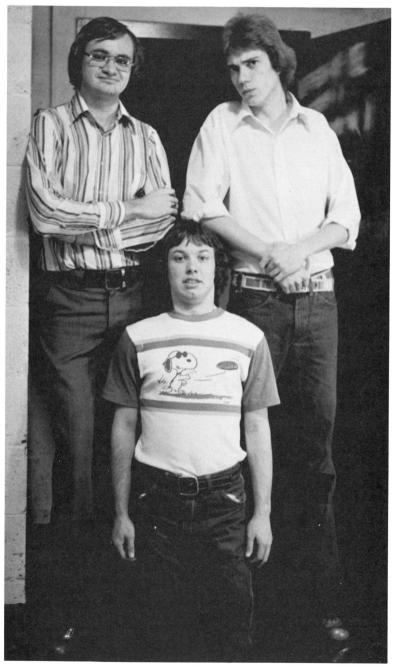

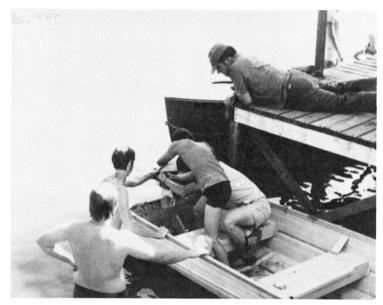

This year has been ... a Tapestry

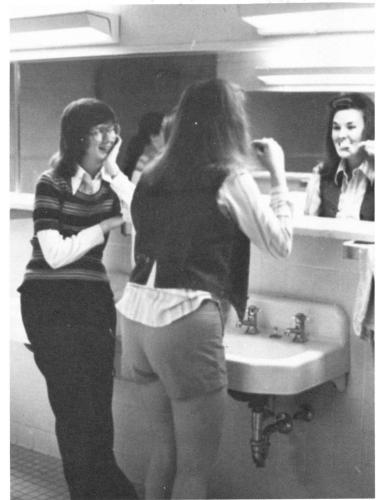

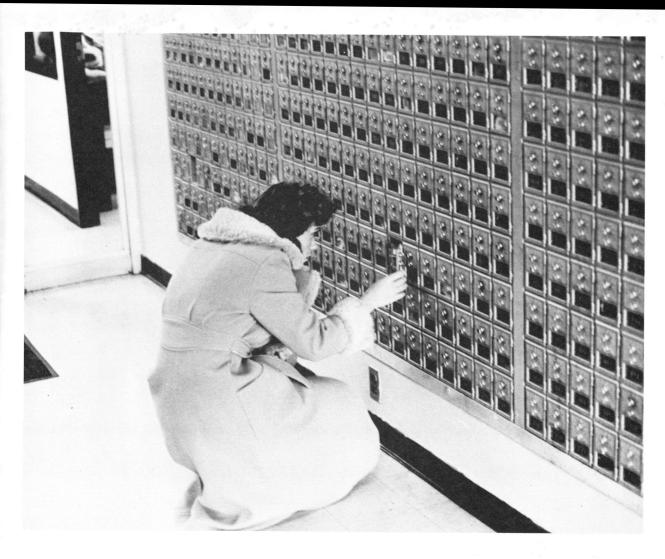

... a Tapestry

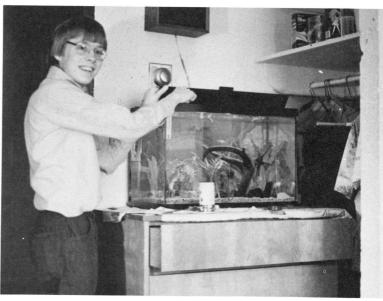

... a Tapestry
